Following Dudley's Defeat and the retreat of the British and Indians, American troops from Fort Meigs crossed the Maumee River and retrieved their fallen Kentucky comrades. They buried them in a mass grave near the fort, a site which became known as Kentucky Hill. It is today part of Fort Meigs State Memorial, a 65-acre park and 10-acre reproduction of the fort in Perrysburg, Ohio. Kentucky Hill has no markers or headstones honoring the Kentucky soldiers' service to the nation.

Correction

Due to an editing error, soldier Linsfield Bicknell was identified in part one as having died in British custody. Bicknell, also identified in records as Linfield Becknel (b. about 1785, N.C.) married Mary "Polly" Asbell/Asbill, in Estill County, Ky., on 15 May 1814. During the War of 1812, he initially served as second corporal in Captain Dudley Farris' Company of Infantry, Kentucky Militia (muster in 11 March 1813), but on 17 April 1813, was assigned to Captain Leslie Combs' Company of Spies, where he served until his discharge on 29 September 1813. Bicknell was pensioned on 28 July 1820 for injuries he had sustained "running the gauntlet outside old Fort Miami following "Dudley's Defeat," on May 1813. He died 12 May 1862 in Kissie, Estill County. Polly continued to receive a widow's pension until her death in May 1887.
